Wallabies Clasp Underdog Role Ahead of Autumn Internationals

Australia has often thrived in contests where they were labeled underdogs, aiming to challenge the experts' predictions, said captain Harry Wilson on the eve of Saturday's Autumn Internationals clash with England. The squad enters the fixture determined to silence doubters once again and showcase their competitive edge on a major stage.

The Wallabies embark on a demanding series of November tests at Twickenham, followed by encounters with Italy, Ireland, and France, and after a patch of inconsistent results, they are not widely tipped for victory against England. Yet they have demonstrated the capacity to secure unexpected triumphs, such as their stunning 38-22 win in Johannesburg over South Africa at the onset of this year's Rugby Championship.

I don't believe there have been many matches since I've captained where we were the favorites, Wilson remarked at a press briefing on Friday. We are usually the outsiders, and very few back us, but as a unit, we relish that. For our squad, we are intensely focused on progress, we trust ourselves, believe in each other, and want to go out and complete the task.

In last year’s Autumn Internationals, Australia overcame England 42-37 at Twickenham despite entering the test after losing five of six games in the 2024 Rugby Championship. Last year’s encounter was a pivotal moment for our team, which frankly bound our poise that on our day, we can defeat anyone globally, and we’ve been firm to build on that, and continue advancing as a squad, Wilson explained.

Wallabies Eye Consistency and Upsets in Autumn Internationals 2025

Ahead of the latest match in the longstanding sporting rivalry between the nations, England coach Steve Borthwick admitted his side was at a slight disadvantage after only four joint training sessions since the Six Nations concluded in March. Yeah, I suppose so, Wilson said. If they choose to highlight that, if it’s a justification for them, but yes, we’ve had a lot of rugby consecutively.

It’s been an incredible year, which we’ve truly enjoyed, and clearly the continuity is present, because we’ve been playing frequently, and if we can turn that into an edge, we certainly will. As the Autumn Internationals continue, Australia will rely on their resilience and flair for upsets, hoping to recreate moments like their Johannesburg victory and last year’s Twickenham triumph.

Proving that even when underestimated, they can challenge the sport’s elite. Wilson emphasized that the squad’s internal focus and mutual belief remain central to their strategy, promising a committed performance in every Autumn Internationals fixture.

The Wallabies’ campaign in these Autumn Internationals is seen as a crucial test of their depth and consistency following mixed results earlier in the year. With clashes against England, Italy, Ireland, and France lined up, the team seeks to harness their experience from previous surprises, combining discipline with daring to aim for notable outcomes.

Italy Vs Australia: Australia Target Growth and Global Statement in Autumn Internationals

The Autumn Internationals are a stage where we can show the world what we are capable of, Wilson added. It’s about concentrating on our game, maintaining belief, and executing our plans. When we unite as a team, we trust that we can upset anyone, regardless of the predictions.

Every match in these Autumn Internationals presents an opportunity to test ourselves against some of the world’s best teams, to measure our progress, and to demonstrate that our preparation, teamwork, and resilience can produce outstanding results. We know that the expectations are high and that many will write us off before we even kick off, but that’s something we’ve learned to embrace.

It motivates us, sharpens our focus, and strengthens the unity within the squad. The series also serves as essential preparation for future Rugby Championships and other international tournaments, offering Australia the chance to refine tactical approaches, develop depth, integrate emerging talent, and solidify the confidence gained from previous shocks.

Fans will watch keenly, aware that the Wallabies' capacity to defy expectations has consistently defined their recent performances in Autumn Internationals, making every game a potential headline-grabber. Beyond just winning matches, these tests are a chance to build cohesion, experiment with strategies, and ensure that the team is battle-ready for every high-pressure encounter on the global stage.
